Stories make our experiences memorable over time. In constructing and sharing our personal and communal memories, we move in a reflective manner back and forth between our life-world and our life-stories. Advances in network communications and the growing abundance of personal media recording devices provide new opportunities for collecting, examining and re-imagining our life experiences. This paper describes the 'Media Fabrics Experiment', an online rich-media weblog populated by the day-to ...

This course reviews concepts and highlights new directions in GeoVisualization. We review four levels of integrating geospatial data and geographic information systems (GIS) with scientific and information visualization (VIS) methods. These include:• Rudimentary: minimal data sharing between the GIS and Vis systems• Operational: consistency of geospatial data• Functional: transparent communication between the GIS and Vis
